ՔՐԵՄԼԻՆԵԱՆ ՀԱՒԱՏԱՔՆՆԻՉՆԵՐԸ

Posted on November 5, 2009 by keghart.com

Category: Opinions

In the months leading to the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the Genocide of Armenians in 1915, the Kremlin was closely following developments in Armenia. In one of the chapters of the book Ցեղասպանագիտութիւն ("Tseghasbanakidutyun" - the study and sciene of genocide), Prof. Gevork Kherlopian, who lives in Southern California, tells about his encounters with Kremlin investigators. His "discussions" revolve around General Andranik's role as a national hero, and the Armenian Cause.
One of the Kremlin monitors says, "Times have changed. Now it's the the Cold War era. Today Turkey is a member of NATO. Demanding lands from it means to oppose the core of NATO: USA, England, Germany and France".
Reading through the text one may find certain parallels between how Kremlin viewed matters back in the '60s and the dictates of realpolitik today. While the Cold War is over, has anything really changed for Armenians?

In the months leading to the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the Genocide of Armenians in 1915, the Kremlin was closely following developments in Armenia. In one of the chapters of the book Ցեղասպանագիտութիւն ("Tseghasbanakidutyun" - the study and sciene of genocide), Prof. Gevork Kherlopian, who lives in Southern California, tells about his encounters with Kremlin investigators. His "discussions" revolve around General Andranik's role as a national hero, and the Armenian Cause.
One of the Kremlin monitors says, "Times have changed. Now it's the the Cold War era. Today Turkey is a member of NATO. Demanding lands from it means to oppose the core of NATO: USA, England, Germany and France".
Reading through the text one may find certain parallels between how Kremlin viewed matters back in the '60s and the dictates of realpolitik today. While the Cold War is over, has anything really changed for Armenians?