CHRISTMAS TREE

Posted on March 15, 2015 by Keghart

Category: Did You Know?

While the Christmas tree was a German import to England in the 19th century, pagan Armenians celebrated New Year ("Amanor") by weaving Genats Dzar (Tree of Life) from wheat ears, symbolizing health and fertility. The tree was decorated with thorns to ward off the evil eye. They also decorated the tree with dolls and pomegranates. The tree was erected in the most prominent place in the house. Pagan Armenians believed Genats Dzar possessed magical qualities that would make their wishes come true.

While the Christmas tree was a German import to England in the 19th century, pagan Armenians celebrated New Year ("Amanor") by weaving Genats Dzar (Tree of Life) from wheat ears, symbolizing health and fertility. The tree was decorated with thorns to ward off the evil eye. They also decorated the tree with dolls and pomegranates. The tree was erected in the most prominent place in the house. Pagan Armenians believed Genats Dzar possessed magical qualities that would make their wishes come true.