

KILDARE DOBBS' "ANATOLIAN SUITE"

Posted on October 12, 2015 by Keghart

Category: Did You Know?

In his "Anatolian Suite" travel book published in the '80s, Canadian writer Kildare Dobbs gave this advice to women traveling in Turkey: "If you're thinking of travelling alone in eastern Turkey, forget it. Go with a man, no matter what your principles are. Otherwise, they'll think you're a loose woman." In the same book, Dobbs also quoted novelist Kenize Mourad, great-granddaughter of one of the last Turkish sultans, who told him: "Oh, there was no genocide. There were massacres, yes, but no genocide. I think when a massacre goes over a million people, it's genocide. And when it's directed by the government, as it was in this case, it's also no genocide."

In his "Anatolian Suite" travel book published in the '80s, Canadian writer Kildare Dobbs gave this advice to women traveling in Turkey: "If you're thinking of travelling alone in eastern Turkey, forget it. Go with a man, no matter what your principles are. Otherwise, they'll think you're a loose woman." In the same book, Dobbs also quoted novelist Kenize Mourad, great-granddaughter of one of the last Turkish sultans, who told him: "Oh, there was no genocide. There were massacres, yes, but no genocide. I think when a massacre goes over a million people, it's genocide. And when it's directed by the government, as it was in this case, it's also no genocide."

