

OTON MATSAETSI

Posted on September 1, 2014 by Keghart

Category: Did You Know?

In "Global History" professor of architecture Mark Jarzombek mentions medieval architect Oton Matsaetsi (Odo of Metz in Germany) who was Armenian. Matsaetsi was the architect of Germigny-des-Pres, one of the most innovative stone structures in northern Europe. He was also the architect of Charlemagne's Palace Church in Aachen in 794. The church's architecture influenced a number of other contemporary church styles.

In "Global History" professor of architecture Mark Jarzombek mentions medieval architect Oton Matsaetsi (Odo of Metz in Germany) who was Armenian. Matsaetsi was the architect of Germigny-des-Pres, one of the most innovative stone structures in northern Europe. He was also the architect of Charlemagne's Palace Church in Aachen in 794. The church's architecture influenced a number of other contemporary church styles.

