Once again, America has a Liar in the White House.

Once again, the Armenians have been successfully lied to by a politician.

Once again, Turkey has shown that it is the most powerful country in the world, with the American president dancing to the Turkish tunes.

Once again, the Armenians have learned that they have no friends in Washington. No, correct that! Once again the Armenians have been exposed to the fact that they have no friends in Washington. Whether or not the Armenians are intelligent enough to learn that fact depends on whether or not the Armenians decide to do something about lying politicians.

I refer, of course, to the fact that the Liar in the White House, Mark 3, taking his orders from Ankara, refused to use the "Genocide" word in the usual presidential hypocritical statement.

Of course, no one really expected a genocide-recognition statement from the White House. We saw that almost as soon as the Senate confirmed the appointment of Senator Clinton as Secretary of State, the Turks summoned her to Ankara and told her what she must do and not do and whom she must appoint as flunkies (pro-Turks) and whom she must not (pro-Armenians).

Then to make sure Washington had received the Turkish message, the Liar in the White House was commanded to go to Ankara and get his instructions first-hand and then visit the tomb of Mustafa Kemal and pay homage to the pederast as one of the greatest people in the history of the universe.

And, yet, the Armenians continued to fool themselves that an honest man had entered the White House. But, that is yesterday's story. What is now important is whether or not the Armenians have learned an important lesson.

What is now necessary, if the Armenians are still interested in having an American president use the "Genocide" word, is to learn and take action. If not, let us not masturbate in the months leading up each April 24, and just get on with our lives.

If Genocide-recognition on the part of an American president is important, then the Armenians must start thinking of the next elections and, starting yesterday, begin to take action.

What is that action? All Armenians everywhere must make plans to vote for the Republican candidate in every election--beginning with all local elections, including those this year (such as in Pennsylvania). That includes voting against those Democrat politicians who utter lip-service love of the Armenians but who have no influence on their Democrat president. Let them, too, end up on the outside looking in after the next election.

But, you say, the Republican presidents are liars, also. Yes, I agree, but this is not a reward for past behavior. The Republicans are to be used as the carrier of a message to the Liar in the White House--and to all politicians--that they must learn they cannot depend on the Armenian vote and that the Armenians look for results, not words, and that the Armenians will now vote against a candidate, rather than for a candidate.

If, in the 2010 Congress, the Republicans take control, the Liar in the White House and all his Turkey-loving advisors will have to realize that it was the Armenian vote that put the Republicans in control. Fortunately, most Armenians live in the most populous states and these states have enough Senators and Representatives to swing control.

If every Armenian says to every Democrat politician--Yes, even to your "friend," the one you like to boast about because you have been photographed with him--"You and your president lied to me, so out you go," and if every Armenian votes Republican the message will get through.

The Armenian media has a major role to play in this campaign. It must constantly remind its readers to "Think Republican. Vote Republican." It must do so on a regular basis and stop pandering to those people and groups who purport to represent the Armenians and who carry on with politicians as if they were honorable people. And, no more publicity about those phonies who join the Armenian Caucus but produce no results.

Turkey is fighting a war. It has declared war on the Truth, and is engaging on a campaign of Vericide, and the Armenians must fight back and it is imperative to include Turkey's allies, starting with the Liar in the White House.

If the Armenians act in their self-interest and vote against the Democrats and change the face of Congress, they could very well also change the face of politics. But, let us not get carried away. First, teach the Liar in the White House a lesson; give him a Congress he will not welcome.

If that happens, the Liar in the White House will be faced with two choices: He will continue to lick the boots of the Turkish president and seriously contemplate losing in 2012 or, in hopes of getting re-elected, will live up to his past promises and statements and will deliver in April 2011 and also in April 2012. Of course, if the Republicans also realize who put them in control of Congress, and why, they, too, will pass Genocide-recognizing Resolutions.

If the Armenians have the intelligence to vote Republican in the next election, it could end up in a win/win situation: A consummation devoutly to be wished.

For this situation to come to pass, it means that each Armenian must act intelligently, and not rely on those who profess to represent the Armenians who have shown how ineffective, if not downright useless, they are.

But all, depends on the Armenians showing some intelligence. Aye, there's the rub, Somehow, the words "Armenian" and "intelligence" do not seem to go together--as the Turks know.
